

VIDEO DEPOSITIONS

Video depositions are far superior to a static transcript and are likely to keep the jury focused on factual aspects of the case. Video depositions are crucial for use when witnesses are not available to appear for trial. A video deposition can prove an admission of the opposing party.

VIDEO ADVANTAGES

Due to the concerns arising from COVID-19, your company may opt for digital solutions to effectively facilitate remote depositions and videoconferencing. As courts continue to delay proceedings, it allots some with more time for preparation.

Regardless of prevalent contagions, here are top reasons to consider leveraging advanced technology and remote access for videoconferencing, or deposing a witness:

- Unforeseen delays and cancellations.
- Lost time and cost of travel.
- Travel jeopardizing the health and general well-being of employees.
- Video depositions conducted early in a case cause expeditious settling. Thus, saving time and other expenses.

VIDEOGRAPHY

Video depositions can be a crucial tool to capture a deponent's expressions and reactions. The stress and anxiety of litigation can cause the deponent to appear worried, evasive, and combative while answering questions under oath. Video footage can be utilized as exhibit evidence such as by depicting event reenactment, onsite inspection, and animation to show the outcome of dangerous, reckless conduct.
